Going to Court for a Domestic Violence Order – Aggrieved

This information sheet is about going to court for a Domestic Violence Order.

It is also called a DVO.

If you want more information about Domestic Violence Orders, you can read:

- 'What is a Domestic Violence Order?' information sheet.

You are the aggrieved. This is the person who wants protection.

The respondent is the person you want protection from.

What will Happen at Court?

You will go to the Magistrate Court.

This is the type of court you get DVOs from.

The respondent will have 3 choices –

1. Adjourn

This means the respondent wants to come back to court another day.

They will make the decision when they come back to court.

2. Consent without Admissions

This means the respondent says yes to the DVO.

They do not agree that they did what the DVO says.

3. Contest

This means the respondent says no to the DVO.

It means they want to do a hearing.

Hearing

A hearing is at court.

You and the respondent will need to show evidence.

Evidence is used as proof that what you are saying is true.

Temporary DVO

A Temporary DVO might be put in place while the DVO is going through court.

A Temporary DVO is the same as a DVO but it only lasts until the next time you go to court.
